Pennsylvanian thus writes: It is evident that there is very little harmony among the leaders of the late Black - Republican party. Governor Seward was very cold in the cause of Fremont, and the differences between the Herald and Tribune, as to the principles that should govern our Territories hereafter, are certain to produce their natural results upon the rank and file of the sectionthat an immense amount of money was sent into Pennsylvania, and was either pocketed by those who been repeatedly alluded to in the newspapers, but no notice has been taken of it. Burlingame, Banks and Wilson, who stumped Pennsylvania, are on hand here, and seem to be quite uncertain as to what course they shall take in the future. The friends of John McLean are hopeful, and point to the late election as the evidence that if he had been nominated he would have defeated the Democratic candidate. But what is doing more than all to dishearten and disgust the opposition to the Democracy is, the attempt of the New York leaders to force Fremont into the field for 1860. This will break the whole fabric down. At first, it looked to me like a mere expedient after the campaign was over, but there is no doubt that the California Colonel is doing all he can to hold on to the nomination, and to compel the opposition party to accept him as their next Presidential candidate. You will perceive by the debates in the Senate, that the Black-Republicans are labor. moreover, that Schamyl, the Circassian Chief, was ing hard to keep up the excitement, but it is of no opposed to it. We are glad to find the republican Washington correspondent of this Springfield paper thus bearing out our account of the manner in which he gets up his Senatorial poses, gesticular climaxes and other oratorical effects, which are within the reach of anybody with as good a voice making cabinets for Mr. Buchanan. This Bishop after long pondering of the circumstances, thought that a decent respect for lawn sleeves and silk aprons required that he should do something in the matter; that he should calmly, and in Christian-like manner, advert to the circumstance in Parliament; so he mentioned it in Parliament .-He was instantly satisfied by his noble friend, Lord Clarendon, by his being assured that the attention of Government was turned to that painful thing, and
